SIDS are a diverse group of countries with uniquely different challenges, opportunities and priorities. But whatever their national goals and aspirations are, the common enabler to achieving them is through the power of genuine and durable partnerships. My own country is passionate about partnerships because it speaks to our history as an island nation and our journey in these uncharted waters of globalization. Partnerships for Samoa is not just your ideological North-South dichotomy, it also encompasses SIDS-SIDS, South-South and triangular partnerships. Importantly, it includes partnerships between SIDS as a group and their development partners, as well as private sector partnerships and public/private partnerships. And remember, the private sector is the engine of growth, and partnerships should not be a monopoly of anyone particular group of partners.”

– H.E. Mr. Ali'ioaiga Feturi Elisaia, Permanent Representative of the Independent State of Samoa to the United Nations

The importance of the private sector is not a new phenomenon in the global discourse on SIDS. Ten years ago, the Mauritius International Meeting on SIDS had also emphasised this role, calling for a strengthening of business and industry in SIDS in efforts to support their development aspirations. However, a fresh sense of urgency has been injected by the international community in the Rio+20 conference, which underscored that sustainable development can only be achieved with a broad alliance of people, governments, civil society and private sector, working together to secure the future.”

– Mr. Gyan Acharya, Under-Secretary-General and High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States
