Concept Note

Background

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development offers a framework to strengthen and transform preventive action to build peaceful, just and inclusive societies. Through the SDGs, countries are envisaging “a world of universal respect for equality and non-discrimination,” underscore the importance of equality and non-discrimination with the overarching commitment to “leaving no one behind” and promoting peaceful, just and inclusive societies.

Expected outcomes

This Lab will offer participating countries the opportunity to share good practices on peacebuilding and sustaining peace, including through creating economic opportunities, strengthening institutions, reducing inequalities, as well as promoting just and inclusive societies. Participants – including Governments and civil society groups – will share their experiences on how the implementation of the 2030 Agenda is making a difference to people’s lives, especially those living in conditions of violent conflict and insecurity.

This discussion will focus on national-level measures to improve the condition of the poorest and most vulnerable sectors of the population in selected countries as a means to “leave no one behind” and build peaceful, inclusive and just societies.

Participants will benefit from hearing other countries’ experiences and lessons learned and will be able to reflect on common challenges in policy making, data collection, mobilizing resources, building partnerships and accelerating implementation.

The Lab will be held under Chatham House Rule to allow for frank discussions. A short summary of the Lab will be prepared by the organizers for posting online.
